

WEIGHT

23 Tips for Weight Loss That Actually Work

From savoring your food to prioritizing protein, check out this practical advice for losing weight, courtesy of registered dietitian nutritionists.

By Lambeth Hochwald and Leslie Barrie

Medically Reviewed by Kelly Kennedy, RDN

Reviewed: August 12, 2022

This Super Simple "Soup Ritual" Melted 69 Pounds of Nagging Fat After My Humiliating Honeymoon

Discover How Women & Men
Over 50 Are Melting Belly
Fat Like Crazy With a Simple Daily Ritual That:

Burns Abdominal Fat 240% Faster
Lose 1 Jean Size In a Single Week

Kills Hunger & the Most Intense Cravings Without Cutting Calories
Drastically Improves Blood Pressure & Blood Sugars in Just One Week
Lose Up To 4 Sizes in Just 4 Weeks While Eliminating Achiness & Fatigue

>> Click here to get you 14 day rapid soup diet specifically for you with your favorite foods!

Over the years, you've probably heard your fair share of wacky weight loss advice, whether it's to drink celery juice every day or replace your meals with weight loss "cookies." And often those tips are promoted by people without any health expertise. (Read: Proceed with caution.)

But just as there's a ton of misguided weight loss advice out there to be avoided, there are also a lot of legitimate, research-backed, and expert-approved suggestions for people who are in the right mental health space and have weight loss as a personal goal.

One such tip is to pick a time to exercise — and stick to it. A study published in July 2019 in the journal Obesity found that exercising consistently at a certain time each day may help you successfully maintain weight loss.

More good advice is to choose nuts over heavily processed snacks. An article published in December 2019 in BMJ Nutrition, Prevention & Health found that cutting back on processed foods and upping how many nuts you eat by half a serving (for example, from half an ounce to 1 ounce) each day is linked with less weight gain and lower odds of obesity.

There's also evidence that a weight loss counselor could help you trim your waistline. A study published in November 2019 in JAMA Internal Medicine found that for people with type 2 diabetes, pairing such counseling sessions (in this case, weight loss via low-carb dieting) with group medical visits helped them lose weight and take less medication compared with a group that did not undergo counseling. A win-win!

Your mindset can matter, too, when it comes to weight loss. Research published in February 2022 in the journal Obesity found that those who lost weight and maintained it embraced their setbacks, seeing them as temporary pauses in their plan, rather than as failures.

What doesn't work? Endless dieting. In obese men, taking a two-week diet break may have aided weight loss, according to a small study published in August 2017 in the International Journal of Obesity.

Follow those sorts of tips and you just might find yourself shedding pounds. Discover other tips for losing weight here.

An Easy Way To Reduce Fat While Cooking

Chef Daniel Green shows you how to cut back on fat with this easy cooking hack.

1. Eat Slowly

"I have my clients learn how to choose foods they like, really taste each morsel going into their mouths, and chew deliberately. I advise them to chew slowly, swallow only when the food is all chewed up, and repeat. It takes time to know we're full. Eating slowly not only allows us to enjoy our food more but gives us better cues of satiety." — Janet Zinn, a licensed clinical social worker and psychotherapist in private practice in New York City

2. Enjoy the Food You Eat

"So often we're told what to eat, and then when we don't like that specific food, we're less apt to create long-term healthy habits. Try new fruits and vegetables. Find out how to prepare new dishes that provide variety and flavor. Add herbs and spices to elevate flavor. Or if you prefer, savor the sweetness of fruit and the depth of raw and steamed vegetables. There's no reason that your relationship with food can't be pleasurable." — Zinn

3. Keep a Daily Gratitude Journal

"Our eating habits are sometimes connected to our emotions, whether we realize it or not. When we're stressed, we may use food to help cope with the stress. I work with clients on keeping a daily journal of things they're grateful for — or even just a journal to write in when stressed — so that they're better prepared to cope with the stress by acknowledging it and utilizing other tools, rather than reaching for food as a coping mechanism." — Lauren Manganiello, RDN, a yoga instructor on Long Island, New York

4. Batch Cook and Prep

"Every Sunday I batch cook enough chicken for the week. I cut off the fat, bake it with seasoning, measure 3.5 ounces, and put that much into a container with some mustard and frozen veggies, so I can grab one a day to bring to work. I also take the time to divvy up in individual containers $\frac{1}{4}$ cup of rolled oats, 1 tablespoon each of natural peanut butter and ground flax, and a pinch each of protein powder and cinnamon to sweeten. So when I'm a zombie in the morning, all I need to do is add water and microwave!" — Kyra Williams, a personal trainer in Boston

5. Don't Forget the Weights

"Make sure you are lifting weights two or three times a week. Using moderate to heavy weights — three or four sets of 10 to 15 reps with weights that challenge you — helps increase your muscle mass. When you have more muscle on your body, the food you eat is more likely to be utilized as fuel, rather than be stored as fat." — Williams

6. Get Enough Z's

"A lack of sleep increases your hunger hormone, ghrelin, and decreases your satisfaction hormone, leptin, which can contribute to weight gain. When we are sleep deprived, we crave more salty and sweet foods. Why? Because anytime you feel more intense hunger, your cravings for higher energy — aka higher calorie — foods intensify. We also know that the way we think and process our emotions is affected by inadequate sleep, so it's easy to connect this with an impaired ability to make sound choices in many areas of life, including with food. If we flip the coin, we can safely assume that when we are well rested, we will make better choices. When it comes to eating, that would mean that we would eat when we are truly hungry and eat just until satisfied. Our hormones are also going to be better balanced because our bodies got the time needed to sleep, repair, and refresh." — Angela Lemond, a registered dietitian nutritionist in private practice in Texas

7. Don't Skip Meals

"Remember, our body's ultimate goal is to stay alive. As soon as we are being kept from calories, which are literally the life energy for our bodies, it will do things to survive. Our body knows what foods are higher in energy density, and we will crave those more. Honor your hunger and don't allow your body to think it's being starved. This goes against many of the dieting tactics, but those tactics truly don't work well for people in the long term. I generally recommend eating every four hours." — Lemond

8. Stay Hydrated

"Research has found that people who drank two glasses of water before a meal lost more weight than people who didn't drink water before meals — and they kept it off. This simple tip works in two ways. Thirst can mask itself as hunger, causing you to eat more. And water makes you feel fuller, causing you to eat less during a meal." — Megan Casper RDN, a nutrition counselor and the founder and CEO of Nourished Bite

9. Cut Calories, Not Flavor

"By choosing options such as sharp cheddar over mild cheddar, you can use less, but you'll still get a lot of flavor without feeling like you're on a diet." — Casper

10. Weigh Yourself Once a Week

"Same day, same time, same amount of clothing. Remember that your weight isn't a single number but a five-pound range. Work to move the range down, not the exact number." — Lainey Younkin, RD, a nutrition counselor and consultant in Boston

11. Reorganize Your Plate

"Make half your plate vegetables, a quarter of your plate whole grains, and a quarter of your plate lean protein. When you switch the portions of grains and vegetables on your plate, you'll see a difference. The only caveat: Potatoes, corn, and peas are starchy vegetables, so they go in the grains category." — Younkin

12. Start Where You Are and Do What You Can

"Don't feel like you need to overhaul your entire life starting immediately. Assess where you are currently and then figure out where you'd like to be in the future. A great starting point for mostly sedentary people is to get a step counter and see how much you walk on a normal day. Then set a step goal slightly higher than the norm and strive for that, working your way up slowly to a goal of 10,000 steps per day." — Esther Avant, an online sports nutritionist specializing in weight loss who is based in Kapolei, Hawaii

13. Think Big — Not Small

"Focus on the weight loss 'big rocks' — there are a few areas that will give you the most bang for your buck when you're trying to lose weight. Prioritizing those and letting go of all the minutiae that contribute to overwhelm will make reaching your goals feel easier and more sustainable. On the nutrition front, pay attention to calories, protein, and fiber. For exercise, prioritize strength training, daily steps, and recovery." — Avant

14. Look Beyond the Scale

"While the scale isn't useless, it also isn't the only thing that matters. To help you gauge progress that might not be reflected on the scale, take regular photos and measurements, in addition to keeping a running list of non-scale victories. This will help keep the scale in perspective and show you all the positive changes you're making to your health and overall lifestyle." — Avant

15. Give Your Breakfast a Protein Boost

"Aim for 15 to 25 grams of protein at breakfast. Protein is digested slowly and suppresses hunger hormones, helping keep you full. Additionally, a high-protein breakfast helps curb cravings later in the day. Pair protein foods with fiber and healthy fats, like two eggs with whole-wheat toast and avocado or high-protein frozen waffles with nuts, berries, and a little maple syrup." —

16. In Fact, Consume Protein at Every Meal

"Eating protein-rich foods at every meal, especially breakfast, can help shave extra pounds. Protein slows down the digestive process and positively impacts your hunger hormones. Protein can also do better at staving off hunger than carbohydrates. Protein-rich foods include quinoa, edamame, beans, seeds, nuts, eggs, yogurt, cheese, tofu, lentil pasta, poultry, fish, and meat."

— Christine M. Palumbo, RDN, a nutrition consultant from Naperville, Illinois

17. Limit High-Glycemic Carbohydrate Foods

"The glycemic index ranks how quickly blood sugar rises after eating a carbohydrate food. Eating high-glycemic carbohydrate foods like white potatoes and refined bread, especially when eaten alone, will cause a surge in blood sugar, followed by a quick drop. This leaves you feeling hungry and wanting more food. More long-term studies are needed, but short-term studies like this research provide evidence there is a connection. High-glycemic foods are not totally off-limits though. When you work with a registered dietitian nutritionist, we provide individualized ways to help you balance nutrients to prevent spikes in blood sugar, which can help with curbing appetite." — Sue-Ellen Anderson Haynes, RDN, a national media spokesperson of the Academy of Nutrition and Dietetics who is based in Boston

18. Experiment With Fruits at Dessert Time

"Fruits are low in calories and carry tons of nutrients like antioxidants and fiber. According to the CDC, only 10 percent of the U.S. population is meeting their fruit and vegetable intake. Using fruits for dessert will help you meet your daily requirements but also add flavor to your day. Many fruits can be sauteed, grilled, or baked. For example, grilled peach topped with vanilla yogurt and shaved almonds is amazing!" — Anderson Haynes

19. Eat Breakfast Like a King, Lunch Like a Prince, and Dinner Like a Pauper

"It's a saying that has many meanings, but you'll want to take in more of your calories earlier in the day. A study published in November 2019 in the journal Nutrients found that subjects who were given small breakfast and large dinners lost significantly less weight than those assigned to a large breakfast and a smaller dinner. So here we see how smaller meals in the latter part of the day may be an advantage to those who want to lose weight and improve overall health. The interesting thing about this study was the time the dinner was eaten. They found that eating the main meal (larger meal) too late (after 3 p.m.) was associated with difficulty with losing weight. It's important to note that this study is not saying that everyone should not eat after 3 p.m. Each person has individual needs, which may require additional snacks and food, such as those who are pregnant, are breastfeeding, have diabetes, or take medication that require certain foods. This is why it is so important that you seek a consultation with a registered dietitian nutritionist." — Anderson Haynes

20. Get Into Meal Planning

"Meal planning is one of my top tips for staying healthy and eating well. I'm such a fan of the concept that I wrote a book about it! Taking 5 to 10 minutes over the weekend to write out a menu for the week ahead will save you time, money, and unwanted calories down the road. Not sure what to make for dinner tonight? No worries, it's already on your menu plan. Menu planning is a great way to stay organized, and know what groceries you need to buy and what you already have on hand, and it will help ensure a balanced plate. Keep in mind, a night off from cooking and ordering takeout or making a frozen meal is a totally acceptable part of the menu plan. The benefit is knowing ahead that you'll be doing that so you're not scrounging when hunger sets in. And be sure to write down the plan — you're more likely to stick to it if it's in front of you as a reminder." — Jessica Levinson, RDN, a culinary nutrition and communications dietitian and the author of 52-Week Meal Planner: The Complete Guide to Planning Menus, Groceries, Recipes, and More based in Westchester, New York

21. Make a Grocery List and Stick to It

"Once you have your menu planned for the week, make a shopping list either on paper or on your phone — I use Notes, but there are apps for this, too. Knowing in advance what you need to purchase at the supermarket will save you time, reduce food waste, and prevent you from purchasing items that look appealing but you don't actually need. To stick with your list, avoid shopping when hungry or tired. Research shows an increase in impulsive behavior at those times." — Levinson

22. Take Stock of What's in Your Kitchen

"To cook healthy meals you need the right ingredients and kitchen tools on hand. Some staple ingredients I recommend having in your pantry, fridge, and freezer are low-sodium canned beans, canned fish, tomato sauce, whole-grain pasta, quinoa, brown rice, low-sodium stock, low-fat plain yogurt, a variety of fresh and frozen fruit and vegetables, olive oil, and dried herbs and spices. These are just some of the ingredients that can form the base of a healthy and delicious meal." — Levinson

23. Have the Right Tools on Hand

"Similarly, having a good mix of kitchen tools can help ensure easy, efficient, and healthy cooking. For example, a seasoned cast-iron skillet is one of my favorite pans to cook eggs, saute vegetables, and make pancakes, since I don't have to use as much oil or butter to keep food from sticking. Some of my other favorite kitchen tools are an immersion blender, Instant Pot, baking sheets, measuring cups and spoons, and a hand juicer. And of course anyone working in the kitchen should have a quality set of knives." — Levinson

NEWSLETTERS

Sign up for our Diet and Nutrition Newsletter!

Enter your email

Subscribe

By subscribing you agree to the Terms of Use and Privacy Policy.

THE LATEST IN WEIGHT

9 Steps Proven to Help You Lower Your BMI

While it's not a perfect measurement, BMI can be a good indicator of how much fat your body is carrying — and the related risks.

By Jessica Migala October 20, 2022

High-Intensity Interval Training and Intermittent Fasting Improve Health for Overweight Women

Women with overweight or obesity who do both HIIT workouts and time-restricted eating see more improvements in body composition than either intervention...

By Lisa Rapaport October 17, 2022

Extra Inches May Be More Important Than Extra Pounds When It Comes to Heart Failure Risk

A new study found that the relative risk of heart failure grew 11 percent for each extra inch at the waistline.

By Becky Upham September 2, 2022

BMI and Your Health: How Are They Connected?

By Jessica Migala August 29, 2022

8 Reasons You Aren't Losing Weight

Weight loss isn't always a simple equation — other factors, both internal and external — may be standing in the way of your goal. Here are some common...

By Jessica Migala August 9, 2022

5 Reasons It's Harder to Lose Weight With Age

Have you been dieting but not seeing the results you expected? Normal age-related changes to your body may be sabotaging your efforts. Here's how to get...

By Moira Lawler July 12, 2022

Americans Gain the Most Weight While Still in Their Twenties

Study shows that younger people and women are more likely to put on extra pounds.

By Becky Upham July 11, 2022

Half of Americans Support Laws Against Weight-Based Discrimination

Women, people of color, and people who have experienced weight bias were more likely to favor legislation.

By Becky Upham June 17, 2022

Do Motivational Talks Improve Weight Loss Efforts?

A new analysis finds little benefit for people who are already enrolled in a weight loss intervention.

By Becky Upham April 14, 2022

Why Body Mass Index (BMI) Can Be Problematic for the BIPOC Community

By Sheryl Huggins Salomon March 31, 2022

Wellness inspired. Wellness enabled.

NEWSLETTERS

About Us

Careers

Editorial Policy

Newsletters

Meet Our Health Expert
Network

Privacy Policy

Health News

Accessibility Statement

Terms of Use

Contact Us

Feedback

Do Not Sell My Personal Information

Popular Topics

AdChoices

Get the best in health and wellness

Enter your email

Subscribe

By subscribing you agree to the Terms of Use and Privacy Policy.

A PROPERTY OF

More From Everyday Health:

Castle Connolly Top Doctors

DailyOM

Diabetes Daily

Everyday Health Care

Migraine Again

